[Jeremy Thompson report]{ep}

[Text] After the turmoil of the last week, Cory Aquino was back on the campaign trail today, trying to refocus public attention on Monday's all important referendum. She is gambling on a yes vote on the new constitution to regain her country's stability. Aquino's popularity is still high, helped by her pledge that troublemakers will no longer be tolerated. She put down a rebellion of right-wing troops and today ordered the arrest of four high-ranking generals.{ep}

But she also faces pressure from the left. Here in Mindanao, the communists are threatening to take up arms again, now that the cease fire talks have broken down.{ep}

In the northern province of Bataan, soldiers had to dismantle road blocks as left wing extremists orchestrated a day of strikes and rallies to make the homecoming of two local farmers killed in the Mendiola massacre. (Fugilencio Baptista) and (Roberto Carrilio) had joined that fateful march in Manila a week ago demanding land reform from Aquino's government. Their families told us all they had wanted was a little piece of land of their own. Instead, they returned to the village of (Orian) in coffins, their funerals turned into a political rally. The communists find it easy to enlist the support of the oppressed. In a land of poor peasant farmers and rich landlords, changing the feudal system is one of Mrs Aquino's most urgent priorities.{ep}

When the mourning is over, the people of (Orian) must decide whether her new constitution offers them a better chance at the land

these men died for. {ep}
